

This weekend the weather decided to be quite enjoyable as you can see from the morning skyline. The funniest thing is that you will hardly see any French people awake so early in the morning, only tourists bustling about...makes me wonder if they ever enjoy the early mornings.

Anyway we decided to go a little bit around town and see what was appealing to visit for the day. This golden madam seemed to point us in the right direction...

Through some parks and under this archway 'y Voilà' the fantastic Louvre museum. Pretty crowded as you can see in the following pictures, almost seemed as though my visit here was to help me feel what its' like to be a cow in a herd of cattle.

Regardless of the heat and packed atmosphere, there is quite an enormous amount of interesting stuff to see in here. If you want to see more than one of the most famous pieces, you will have to visit here yourself.

Well I have some more work to do this weekend and leave you with this nice front view of the museum. Until next weeks' adventure (hopefully with more time for this fun stuff!)...adieu!
