

Well this week, again, not much to report as far as the fun stuff is concerned. We had a symposium on Thursday with several guest speakers shown in the pictures below.

Following the event we went for a short walk downtown by the Senate building, to have some tea. There were a couple of nice views captured in the following pictures.

As we are entering the last days of our collaborative work here, it's 'crunch time' and all extra-curricular activities for the weekend were put on hold for me, which allowed me more time for writing both code and text. With a single weekend left here until my return to the states, hopefully there will be time for some fun activities...until next week!